Aims and Scope:

Subjectivity is an international, transdisciplinary journal examining the social, cultural and material processes, dynamics and structures of human experience. As a topic, problem and resources, notions of subjectivity are relevant to many disciplines, including cultural and medial studies, sociology, social theory, geography, anthropology, political theory, science and technology studies, and psychology. The journal brings together scholars from across the social sciences and the humanities, publishing high-quality theoretical and empirical papers that address the processes by which subjectivities are produced, explore subjectivity as a focus of social change, and examine how emerging subjectivities remake our social worlds.
